FFF: Global climate strike in 3.3. planned

At a press conference in Vienna on March 3, the call for a global “Fridays for Future” climate strike was also used by activists in Vienna to call for the “criminalization” of the protests. Ultimately, it doesn't matter if we sue, unite, or go on strike, it doesn't matter in what form the climate commitment takes place. “Tomorrow is too late” is the slogan on Friday's twelfth climate demo.

'Fridays of the Future' climate strike called in Vienna

The main reason for the protest, which will take place in Vienna, Linz, Graz and six other places in two days, is the absence of a climate protection law for two years – which means that no climate targets have been set. Austria 790 days. A new issue was the constitutional complaint brought recently due to this absence. One of the twelve claimants is Franziska from Upper Austria. "I was on an FFF demo for the first time when I was 12. It was already clear to me that the climate crisis was escalating at the time," recalls the now 16-year-old, who hasn't even had a climate since 2020. conservation law "I'm tired of those in charge putting the entire ecological burden on my generation." Litigation is another of many possibilities.

Lena, also from Salzburg, 16, reminded that after four years of climate strikes, "it's natural for young people to be on the streets because of the climate". With 2.7 degrees currently the dystopian forecast of global warming, the climate crisis has long been a grim reality for many. "The ÖVP has been blocking climate targets for 800 days," says Lena, and the state is being sued for it. The ÖVP and the Chamber of Commerce would also block expensive gas heating systems, a law that phased out the Renewable Heat Act, and the Greens said, "They're accepting that."

Fridays For Future climate activist talks about 'wiggling your fingers'

Given government policy, FFF climate activist Klara König spoke of a "radical play of the thumbs" and reiterated, among other things, the call for a greenhouse gas target with constitutional status and four other climate-developed targets. "The narrative of climate neutrality by 2040 is an empty promise without legal basis" – instead, the government sells us "every eco-project" as a climate policy milestone, as Austria continues to fuel the climate crisis every day. Instead, right actions would still be lacking, König said, "but the right time to take action was 30 years ago." There will still be hope for Vienna's favorites on Saturday, March 10, when Chancellor Karl Nehammer (ÖVP) will deliver his "Speech on the Future of the Nation" from the top floor of the Twin Towers.

Greenpeace criticism

There will be another strike on Friday as political representatives around the world will fail to implement ambitious climate protection measures to meet the 1.5-degree limit, according to a Greenpeace statement. "Despite the escalating climate and energy crisis, the Austrian federal government does not adequately fulfill its climate protection promises (...) Greenpeace demands that politicians free themselves from the clutches of fossil lobbies and finally give climate protection the necessary priority." By Jasmin Duregger, climate and energy expert at the NGO in Austria.
